During the month of May more than 200 venues in Toronto will showcase local and international photographers in the largest photography event in the world, Contact. The festival highlights not only this city's love for photography, but gives a chance for many talented photographers to display their work.

But May is not the only month to view great photography in Toronto. Dozens of galleries dedicate their exhibit space exclusively or predominately to photography all year long.

In our Best of Toronto survey, a wide-range of photography galleries were selected by our readers. Community-based and artist-run galleries like Gallery 44 and Gallery TPW offer exhibition space for their members. Pikto and Toronto Image Works display photos and also provide a wide-range of photography services in their store. In addition, readers highlighted more traditional individually curated venues, such as The Elaine Fleck Gallery and, our winner, the Stephen Bulger Gallery.
